“Trick or treat!”

A bloodcurdling scream from outside makes me jump. A cardboard robot and a ninja sprint past followed by a six-foot roaring yeti in hot pursuit.

A sudden gust swirls the dry leaves around our feet. The skeletons in their tattered robes are trying desperately to break the strings keeping them tied to the trees.

Everyone’s having a great night. Everyone except me. Somehow I’m always the one who has to clean up the messes. Can’t they see the danger they’re in?

I have an idea, but I’ll need to move fast.

Power flows through me like the change in seasons. This is the season that brings an end to summer and welcomes winter. A time for change.

I step out of the corn maze. People wander past in a daze, their costumes giving us a hint of the night they've had.

Who knows what mischief we'll get up to next year?
